Maine Infantry Foundation & the Brewer Bicentennial

The Maine Infantry Foundation remembers Maine's Infantry contributions and teaches future generations the importance of the role of Maine's Infantrymen. By reaching out to the community and more specifically Maine's children, the Maine Infantry Foundation will teach the lessons of history through the experiences, artifacts and writings of Maine's Infantrymen.

The second purpose is to recognize and reward those Infantrymen and their families who are currently serving during the current conflict. While all branches contribute to the effort, it is the Infantry that takes and holds ground. This mission is hard and essential to the ultimate success of any campaign. This level of commitment takes its toll in time away from families and friends. Many of Maine's Infantrymen have made the ultimate sacrifice. The Maine Infantry Foundation will recognize this sacrifice and reward those families for their strength, perseverance and support.

When John Brewer left his home in Worcester, Massachusetts in 1770 and found a place to operate his sawmill at the headwaters of Segeunkedunk stream, he had a vision of a settlement. With a stout heart and agile mind, he joined with others in the area and made his vision come true. Despite a delay by the Revolutionary War and a British occupation, a settlement was started in 1788. Orrington was its name and descendants of the original charter still exist. It was on February 22nd in the year 1812, when the community of Brewer separated from Orrington and became its own town. Two hundred years later, we celebrate the bicentennial of that community, home to many who would rather live here than anywhere else.
